

Inspirations for young Physicists

There are many famous physicists, and their work has inspired many generations of scientists. My own interest in science comes from reading about not an individual but a team. The team behind the Apollo missions fascinated me throughout my teenage years and I read many books, articles and watched many documentaries on the space race. In fact one of my favourite reads over the last few years was the book by Andrew Smith titled Moon Dust – if you haven't read it, I recommend it

There is also a great film from 1999 called October Sky. (Available on Netflix, although I'm sure other platforms are available). It's based on the true story of NASA engineer Homer Hickam, his biography is called Rocket boys and is also a good read.

Thursday Task

Write a short review of a science based book or film that you feel would inspire a young Physicist, include a reason why.
